If I had five careers. My first career would be doing illustrations and ads for companies with the use of adobe illustrator. I have a decent knowledge of adobe illustrator so it wouldn't be too complex for me to understand. I find using adobe to be fun as well although I would like to learn more through company standards and figure out what companies want exactly in their workplace.

My second career would be freelancing and modifying photos for clients such as touching up the photo or removing an element. Photoshop would be the perfect tool for this because it allows modifying colors and light. My favorite part of photoshop is being able to remove or repair something within a photo as an example removing birds from the back of a photo to adding back pieces of a broken photo.

My third career would be animation because it's fun to do it ties both my skills in photoshop and illustrator enabling me to create a complex moving shape that has a flow to it. This allows me to either work as a freelancer or as an animator for a company. Animation has such a required time frame although and it requires that a lot of time is dedicated to it.

My fourth career would be a web developer. I recently learned how to create a website from the ground up which is something I never thought I'd have the ability to do but i was able to do it finally. I felt accomplished and it felt great setting up the server as well. Personally I think I may pursue it as a future career and make something out of the skills that i've gained from it.
